This work is a modern epic poem. The subject matter involves an issue shunned by western intellectual circles, yet readily discussed in the intellectual clubs of northern China and northern India. This subject matter is the return of the original genetic superlative for the purpose of mankind's redemption from the negative forces of genetic mutation. The subject line is the author's own imaginative embellishment of those discussions, married with points made inside the sophisticated lounge debates of Beijing with associates from the hinterlands of Mongolia, and details found in certain ancient manuscripts.
