They fell in love, but when dawn broke, they parted ways and they were not going to see each other ever again in this life. Years later, hard times had fell on Duncan; losing his father, his mother and his lover, all the people he loved the most, was quite a heavy cross for his heart to bear. A hollow and emotionless blood-pumping muscle was what was left of his heart. Later on, when time had healed the wounds of his heart, he fell in love with an effortlessly and flawlessly beautiful lady by the name Bernice. What happened between them in the course of time was a mystery, and their break-up was the bitterest pill for them both to swallow. Love unfailingly, as time moved on, something happened in Duncan's life; it was something beautiful, something sweet as honey, something to be held and cherished, something that the world can never define – Sandra happened.
